CEASER PHOTOGRAPHY
CREATIVE PORTRAITURE

A Hands-On Workshop

The Portable Portrait workshop is a hands-on, active participation portrait workshop that gets you outside on location using off camera lighting to help expand your creative options.

The workshop has a level of 8 attendees, giving each student time to work with a model and get the feel for how off camera lighting works. It allows the instructor to spend time with each individual while shooting.

This is a team-by-team workshop, giving each student a chance to photograph the subject without interruption.

Students will be using ALL MANUAL with our flashes and camera settings. No TTL, no auto settings. We want to manually control our flashes so we can get consistent flash output from image to image.

Students will be getting familiar with speedlight flashes by brands like Vivitar, Canon and Nikon. We'll be using light modifiers like convertible and shoot-through umbrellas and portable softboxes. We'll be using remote triggers to trigger our flashes wirelessly.

Philosophy

My vision in regards to music encompasses a wide variety of possibilities. Close to my heart is the desire to see music touch lives in such a way that a person cannot describe in words what they have felt or experienced. I want to be able to communicate the language of music in such a way that any person can understand its value and directly relate to its message.

There is also a need to educate thoroughly and concisely so that the student may continue on a journey of perpetual advancement. Finding the fun, joyousness, and joy of learning and sharing music continually motivates me to seek knowledge in all genres.

Many correlations and parallels can be drawn between the oldest of Gregorian chants to the newest of pop songs. Referencing familiar and unfamiliar songs, and pieces is relevant to keep the mind engaged, active and open to receiving new ideas while contextualizing the old.

A wide variety of methods are used because each student has different needs and learning styles. To accommodate all who wish to learn, it is important to learn about the individual first to gather information about their interests, goals, and desires. An initial interview in which musical background, goals, and aspirations are assessed is imperative to gain information of what the student hopes to achieve from lessons. Only when there is a clear objective can real results occur.

This style of site is designed to provide just enough information to encourage people to contact you directly. People are not likely to spend a lot of time reading, so keep the message short and evocative enough to create a positive impression. This approach works well for entrepreneurial service-oriented businesses, small events, and individual product launches.

Each page is best used to express a single idea; the message should be short and sweet, explaining what you offer for what benefit. Accompanying photographs and/or illustration support your messages. When done right, the resulting set of words and images capture the essence of your offering, which makes it easier to share with your audience.

The base package includes a professional headshot session (upper body) at Ceaser Photography plus a customized website template (below) from David Seah Design.

Additional location photography sessions, design customization, and training is available at extra cost. Talk to Sid or Dave for more information.
